

Being a Man

I have confidence and conviction. I can stand strong, or act appropriately when and how necessary. I can be violent without announcing it.

A man who cannot defend himself, those he loves, or those who cannot protect themselves but must rely on others to do that for him is usually a boy in comparison. A man can use violence when necessary to protect from aggressors, but chooses violence only when no other approach would likely be effective.

A man ends a threat rather than punishes evil. A man can kill, but only if that is the only effective solution.

I am that type of man, not because I aspire to that, but because I have observed myself repeatedly
